How We Compare Prices

Author · Hassen Moumen Updated · September 12, 2026 Read time · ~2 min

How DatesOracle verifies prices Every price shown on DatesOracle is a verified snapshot, not a live ticker. A member of our team manually checks each merchant's listing, records the price exactly as offered on the listing at that moment, and stamps the check with the date and time. The Verified date next to each offer is the moment of that check. When prices are updated Prices are refreshed by a scheduled manual verification sweep. Each offer carries its own last-checked timestamp, so you always know how fresh a number is. We never claim a price is current beyond the moment it was captured, and we never show live prices or price tickers. Where prices come from Each merchant's own online listing (the page a buyer actually lands on). Prices and availability are recorded exactly as the listing shows them at check time. Availability ("In stock") is recorded from the listing at the same moment. Unit-price normalization Because date products are sold in different package sizes, we normalize every verified price to a standard price per ounce (and per pound where shown) using the package weight recorded on the listing. This lets you compare apples to apples across merchants. A note on Amazon offers Where an Amazon offer is listed, we record the Amazon listing's new price as offered at the time of the check. Used or refurbished Amazon prices are not tracked or displayed. What we do not do We do not operate price tracking or price-alerting functionality. Historical benchmarks ("6-mo average", "6-mo low") are summaries of snapshots we captured; they are context, not a live price feed. We do not auto-redirect you to a merchant without a click. You choose the offer and the click takes you to the merchant. We do not guarantee that a listed price is still live; prices change at the merchant's discretion. Affiliate disclosure Some offers on DatesOracle are affiliate links. If you click an affiliate offer and make a purchase, DatesOracle may earn a commission at no extra cost to you. Affiliate relationships never influence which product earns a badge or how prices are verified. See our full Affiliate Disclosure.
